

www.patriciasimpson.com • ps@patriciasimpson.com • 510-227-5070

Press Release

July 30, 2009

Local Author Inspired by Daughter's Relationship Woes

Photo by Craig Merrill

Don't people think dating is important anymore? Is there no man out there who wants to treat a lady like a lady, and doesn't expect her to give it up on the first date?

Enter Hugh Lachlan, Knight Templar, the latest literary creation of local author Patricia Simpson in her paranormal novel, SPELLBOUND. SPELLBOUND was written with Simpson's daughter in mind, by creating a man she would like to see walk into her daughter's life. Simpson's hero is a time-traveling knight who helps a gutsy modern woman solve a mystery in Scotland and shows her what a real man is along the way.

Simpson is no stranger to paranormal heroes. She's an award-winning author of fourteen books, published by Harper, Silhouette, and TOR. Many of her books feature Scottish heroes, a character-type based on her own Caledonian husband.

SPELLBOUND is also an experimental project targeted for the emerging print-on-demand (POD) technology. Simpson, who is also an artist, designed and produced the novel, and chose to concentrate on POD and digital editions to avoid the waste of resources inherent in the current industry model.

Press kit items available
at www.patriciasimpson.com

"Simpson hits one out of the ballpark!"
—RT Book Reviews

978-0-9823442-4-8 - Print
978-0-9823442-3-1 - Digital

